Police gear up against fentanyl

SAFETY

Respirators to protect against exposure after officer hospitalized

Stephanie Taylor
Metro | Winnipeg

The Winnipeg Police Service is starting to fit its front-line officers with respirator masks to keep them safe from exposure to the deadly drug fentanyl.

That's only one of the potential safety measures the force is considering after a "sharp upward trend" of fentanyl-related incidents has been reported, police spokesperson Const. Rob Carver said on Thursday.

Fentanyl is a prescription opiate typically used to treat severe pain, and experts say some doses can be 100 times more toxic than morphine.

If particulate matter from fentanyl becomes airborne, Carver says anyone — in particular, a general patrol officer responding to a call — can be put in danger.

"This is a concern that every law enforcement agency currently, I would say in North America, is looking at," he said in an interview Thursday. "The potential for fentanyl contamination exposure and subsequently dealing with the effects of it is something that every first-line officer would be facing."

He said patrol officers are not currently equipped with any other form of protective filter masks.

Carver said the force's occupational health and safety co-ordinator is in the early stages of developing new policies and procedures to protect officers from fentanyl exposure.

One of the challenges, Carver says, is to ensure the new gear, such as gloves or masks, don't get in the way of other police operations.

"We couldn't wear giant gloves if we're first responders where we couldn't access a firearm," he explained. "This isn't the same way a HAZMAT team would go in because these are the first people (on scene) who have multiple roles."

Mo Sabourin, president of the Winnipeg Police Association, said the union has been advocating for general patrol officers to wear respirators for the past three years.

Besides protection from fentanyl, he said respirators could be worn by officers who respond to fires to prevent smoke inhalation.

Sabourin said fentanyl is a huge concern for members, and recently, an officer had to be treated in hospital for exposure to fentanyl.

"Our profession continues to become more complex and more dangerous. This wasn't an issue a couple of years ago," he said.

Neighbourhood says no to man's pigeon proposal

...and City Hall formally nixes planned coop for racing birds

Stephanie Taylor
Metro | Winnipeg

One Winnipeg man's plan to house racing pigeons in his backyard doesn't fly with city hall.

On Thursday, an appeals committee rejected Karim Lowen's proposal to build a pigeon coop on his property on Mathers Avenue.

"It's just really sad," he said afterwards, adding he can't race pigeons without a loft at his home.

The city's board of adjustment previously approved Lowen's plan, but then a group of five residents filed an appeal, citing a petition of more than 100 signatures.

They raised a litany of smell-related, noise and health concerns with having pigeons live close to their homes.

Area Coun. John Orlikow appeared before Thursday's committee in support of concerned residents.

He said his office has received numerous phone calls from community members worried about the proposed pigeon coop.

Karim Lowen wants to raise racing pigeons in his backyard. He holds images of a common street pigeon, left, and a racing pigeon at City Hall in Winnipeg. LYLE STAFFORD/FOR METRO

"The neighbourhood has spoken," he said.

"This is not a right for someone to have a hobby in their backyard that the neighbourhood is not that keen on."

At the end of her address, resident Toby Shapiro said: "It's not a hobby for me."

This is the second time Lowen has made a request to house racing pigeons.

About two years ago, he applied to build an aviary at his home in Royalwood, an area of South St. Boniface, but was refused following opposition from neighbours who corralled former councillor Dan Vandal, who's now an MP.

City rules allow aviaries — as long as they house flightless birds. But because Lowen's fowl need to fly, he must be approved for both a conditional and variance use.

According to an application filed with the city's planning department, the coop—which Lowen describes as a small shed—would hold between 40-45 birds, and be 96-square-feet in width and six feet high.

On Thursday, Lowen tried to quell his neighbours' fears by explaining the difference between a racing pigeon and the type of pigeon seen lingering on roofs and in city parks.

"It's basically like comparing a stray dog—malnutrition and could be disease-ridden—to a Greyhound race dog," he told Metro.

"That's what these [birds] are. These are athletes."

Racing pigeons have an uncanny honing ability, he explained, and have been clocked at flying at more than 90 miles per hour.

At the end of the day, Lowen chalked up the neighbourhood's opposition to misinformation.

"If someone came to me and say, 'Oh, there's going to be pigeons around, like feral pigeons, they're going to be sitting around on trees and pooping everywhere, I would sign the petition, too.'"

RESIDENTIAL SCHOOLS

Court to decide fate of victims' testimony

The future of the often heart-rending stories told by survivors of Canada's residential schools will be decided by the country's top court.

The Supreme Court of Canada said Thursday it would hear the federal government's appeal of a decision that the highly personal accounts should be destroyed after 15 years — unless the individuals decide otherwise. The court also ruled Inuit representatives can take part in the case.

The documents at issue relate to compensation claims made by as many as 30,000 survivors of Indian residential schools — many disturbing accounts of sexual, physical and psychological abuse.

The government, along with the Truth and Reconciliation Commission, argued the survivor accounts are a critical part of Canadian history that should be preserved. However, the claims adjudicator maintained that claimants were promised confidentiality, and only they have the right to waive their privacy.

Initially, a lower court judge ruled the material should be destroyed after 15 years, although individuals could consent to have their stories preserved at the National Centre for Truth and Reconciliation in Winnipeg.

In a split decision in April, the Ontario Court of Appeal agreed, saying the documents were not records subject to archiving laws, and their disposition should be at the sole discretion of the survivors. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Callie Costello wants kids in need to have fun on Halloween

Jessica Botelho-Urbanski
For Metro|Winnipeg

The joy of trick-or-treating in full costume is an experience a local 13-year-old doesn't want any other kid to miss out on this year.

Callie Costello is collecting Halloween costumes for kids in need for the second year.

Her living room in St. James is already overflowing with about 15 boxes and nine garbage bags worth of superhero suits, princess dresses, tutus, masks and more.

Callie hopes to collect as many costumes as she did when she set out on this mission for the first time last year—so about 1,100 by Saturday.

She currently has about 650 donations.

ticipate in Halloween and it's really sad. It's an event for kids," Callie said.

"There are a couple people at my school who don't have Halloween costumes because they can't afford to buy one."

Callie's mom, Crystal, helps her sort the heaps of clothing by age range—toddler through teen. She said her daughter is always trying to maximize her generosity, pointing to her other successful fundraiser, Callie's Backpacks, where she donates knapsacks full of toiletries to the homeless.

She started that venture at age 10 and has donated about 2,250 backpacks since.

A lot of kids don't get to participate in Halloween and it's really sad.

Callie Costello

"Winnipeg is cheaper than other cities, but things are expensive... and Callie's always been one to say, 'hey, do you want to help do this or that?'" Costello said.

"We're not in a big fancy house, but everybody knows people who need things. As a single mom, I remember making a costume and staying up really late after coming home and cooking and cleaning. I couldn't afford a costume and I made one. Things are hard and we should always try to help people."

There are 11 drop-off locations for costumes around Winnipeg, all listed on Callie's Backpacks Facebook page.

The mom and daughter said they'll be collecting costumes for two weeks after Halloween, in case people want to donate after the holiday for next year.

WEATHER

Brutal winter in forecast

Braeden Jones
Metro | Winnipeg

Winnipeggers should enjoy this mild fall weather while it lasts.

A brutally cold winter is in the forecast, according to a meteorologist with The Weather Network.

"There's a lot of doom and gloom people are talking about, but the rest of October, early part of November are not too bad," said Dayna Vettese. "But yeah it does look like once we get into early winter we'll be dealing with colder than normal temperatures."

Last winter wasn't too bad in Winnipeg, and most of Canada "got off pretty easy with not the harshest of winters," she said.

No such luck this year, as in the later part of November Winnipeggers will start to notice a brutal cold setting in.

The cold is one thing. Let's hope we don't get regular snow dumps like on New Year's Eve 2006, pictured here. THE CANADIAN PRESS

The average daytime high for November is about zero, with the second half of the month really "dragging that down" with a "feels like" temperature below zero on average.

Normal daytime highs are eight below for December, -11C for January, and -8C in February.

"This winter, we're anticipating to be averaging below that, colder than normal on average," Vettese said. "Doesn't mean every single day will be, but below that for our average highs."

OCT. 31

Halloween forecast

There's nothing to be afraid of this Halloween in Winnipeg — at least not in terms of the weather. Vettese said trick or treaters should expect a dry, cool Monday night, and a decent weekend before it. "Going into the weekend, I know a lot of people are heading out to Halloween parties and haunted houses... daytime highs we're looking at mid to high single digit (temperatures), overnight lows we're going to hover a few degrees above zero," she said, adding it'll "be on the cool side," but not bad. On Halloween night, the temperature should be around 5C, "but it will be a bit on the breezy side."

Conjuring up a rich witch history

HALLOWEEN

Sorceresses to gather at dusk Sunday for ritual

Jessica Botelho-Urbanski
For Metro | Winnipeg

If you don't know boo about witches, local sorceresses wish to cast your ignorance aside this weekend.

On Sunday, witches will gather in Vimy Ridge Memorial Park starting at 4 p.m. for a Samhain open circle ritual. It's a traditional Celtic celebration to ring in the witches' new year, a bridge between "the light and dark halves of the year," said Winnipeg witch Susanne McCrea.

"As I got older, I became more aware of the historical context of the word 'witch' and I feel good about using it," McCrea said.

"It was a word that was used to terrify and murder women for 300 years," she continued, referring to ancient witch trials. "So it sparks controversy, it makes people ask you about it ... It's (time for) a reclaiming of that word. Yeah, I'm a witch and it's not a frightening or superstitious thing."

McCrea and her friend Stacy Klassen organized the Samhain ritual, which will include an altar honouring ancestors, a dance with brooms and the opportunity to speak wishes into a cauldron. Hot chocolate and cookies will be served and anyone, including kids, is welcome to attend, McCrea said.

The witches chose a very public locale to spread the word about their craft to curious passersby. It's also a chance to learn about the history of Halloween, including why people began wearing dark costumes.

"The costumes came from people wanting to blend in with sort of malevolent spirits so that they wouldn't be noticed and picked on," McCrea explained.

"Then the candy that people are getting at the door now most likely comes from the offerings that people used to leave outside their front doors ... with the hope that any agitated or troubled spirits would just eat the food and keep going and be satisfied."

Last weekend, about 40 people gathered at Westminster Housing Co-op to make brooms for Sunday, constructed with materials Klassen foraged from forests in and around the city — sage, goldenrod, birch twigs and oak branches.

Susanne McCrea

old to make room for the new. There's a lot of rich history in many different folktales about the use of brooms. We're focusing on the broom as a purifying tool to sweep out negative energy," Klassen said.

The Samhain ritual will begin at dusk, a deliberate move so people will check in with nature — and not a clock — to know when to come down.

Sponsored refugees fare better: Review

IMMIGRATION

65 per cent of government-assisted refugees use food banks

Refugees sponsored by community groups do better than government-assisted ones with fewer relying on food banks and social assistance, an evaluation of Canada's much heralded resettlement program shows.

Some 65 per cent of government-assisted refugees reported using food banks, compared to only 29 per cent of their privately sponsored counterparts, according to the Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada report released this week.

Five years after their arrival, 41 per cent of government-assisted refugees relied on social assistance, compared to just 28 per cent among those sponsored by private groups. While six out of 10 of the former were employed within five years, the rate went up to 7 out of 10 for their privately sponsored peers.

The relative success of privately sponsored refugees is bolstered, in part, by the stability and guidance offered by relatives or sponsorship groups, advocates say.

Janet Dench, executive director of the Canadian Council for Refugees, said she was not surprised with the findings.

There is a lot of energy, opportunity and availability.

Janet Dench

"Privately-sponsored refugees usually have family members in Canada for support and they are not selected for their vulnerability like the GARs (government-assisted refugees) are," she explained.

The internal review examined all aspects of the refugee resettlement programs — government-assisted, private sponsorship, the blended-visa program, which is a blend of the two, and the resettlement assistance program — between 2010 and 2015, before Ottawa opened its doors to 31,000 Syrian refugees in December.

During the period, a total of 49,516 refugees were resettled in Canada. 53 per cent of them under the government-assisted program, 46 per cent sponsored by private community groups and just one per cent under the blended-visa program.

Thirty-nine per cent of government-assisted refugees were children, compared to 30 per cent among their privately-sponsored counterparts.

"There are a lot of groups that want to do private sponsorships as a result of the Syrian resettlement efforts. There is a lot of energy, opportunity and availability. If the government does not make it more responsive to these groups, we are going to lose them," said Dench.

POLITICS

New bi-partisan senators chosen

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau has named nine new, non-partisan senators, bringing him within reach of his goal to transform the discredited Senate into a more reputable, independent chamber of sober second thought.

The five women and four men hail from a wide variety of backgrounds, from an art historian to a renowned human rights lawyer to a conservationist. All will sit as independents in the Senate.

They are the first senators to be chosen under an arm's-length process that saw more than 2,700 people apply to fill the 21 vacancies in the 105-seat upper house.

Trudeau is poised to announce two more batches of appointments within days, filling the remaining 12 empty seats - six from Quebec, six from Ontario - and, for the first time, putting senators with no partisan affiliation in the driver's seat.

When he's done, independent senators will hold a plurality of 44 seats, outnumbering the Conservatives' 40 and the independent Liberals' 21.

'The deadliest of its kind': UNICEF

SYRIA

UN says attack on Idlib school a potential war crime

UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon called on Thursday for an immediate investigation of an attack on a school in Syria's Idlib province that the UN's children's agency is calling one of the deadliest of its kind in the country's six-year war.

UNICEF raised its toll for Wednesday's attack to 28 dead, among them 22 children and six teachers.

Ban said in a statement that the attack, carried out against rebel-held territory, may be a war crime if found to be deliberate.

Witnesses said overhead jets targeted the school in the town of Hass as many as 10 times, around midday Wednesday. Opposition activists blamed the strikes on Russian and government planes.

ition stronghold, though radical militant groups also have a large presence there. It has regularly been hit by Syrian and Russian warplanes and the U.S.-led coalition targeting Daesh militants.

The Russian military denied responsibility, calling the accusations a "sham."

Russian Defence Ministry spokesman Maj. Gen. Igor Konashenkov said a Russian drone flew over the school building Thursday and found its roof intact and no bomb craters around it.

The Syrian Civil Defence first responders team said on Thursday that the airstrikes killed at least 35 people, mostly children.

The Britain-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said 15 students were killed, as well as four teachers and three other women. It was not immediately possible to reconcile the separate figures, but divergent death tolls are not uncommon in a conflict-torn Syria that has been largely inaccessible to international media for over two years.

Welcome to America the Cliché

Rosemary Westwood relocates from Canada to the United States in the midst of the most unusual presidential election ever. She chronicles her observations in a weekly column for Metro.

ROSEMARY WESTWOOD
From the U.S.

It couldn't have been a more clichéd start to a new life in the U.S.A.

At the Detroit border between the U.S. and Canada, waiting in a small grey room for my immigration paperwork to be processed while border officers rummaged through the U-Haul truck, there were the usual markers that you're in America now, baby: A large, framed photo of the president, a series of beefy, mostly white male guards in buzzcuts, an array of bald-eagle images, and a mostly non-white group of travellers chosen for extra scrutiny.

But also this: An alleged instance of racial profiling. A tense encounter between a black man, who was saying he'd been stopped for more questioning at the border 10 times in a row, and officers, who said the man was "resisting."

"That's what's wrong," one guard said, shaking his head. "It's happening all over the country. It's not disrespectful to obey the commands of an officer."

I heard voices and scuffles, and when the black man came out into the waiting area, his white hightops were undone. "They broke my watch," he told his girlfriend, slumping into a chair beside her.

Another white guard tried to smooth things over: "I just want to make sure you understand what this is about."

"Oh, I know what this is about," the black man said.

But I never saw how it ended. A guard processed my visa paperwork, and I was officially living in America, making my debut in the lattice-work criss-cross of southeastern Michigan's four-lane freeways.

Then came the second cliché. In the middle of the night, in a Dearborn, Mich. hotel, I heard gunshots. Pop-pop. Pop-pop-pop-pop. I shook my fiancé awake, terrified. There was screaming, too many voices to count, and as they grew louder and closer I pushed both of us off the bed, dragging the blankets, to hide behind a wall. We waited. The sounds dimmed. There were no sirens.

The next morning, joking that I had "saved us," and skeptical that I'd heard what I thought I'd heard, I asked the front desk guy. He frowned.

"Yeah," he said. "Sorry."

"We haven't had a shooting for four years," he assured us. The night security guard had left the left the premises earlier in the evening, he said, because — what else — his sister had been shot. The shooting we'd heard occurred later, outside the hotel lobby. "They called the cops, but they never came." About that last fact, he was apologetic but unsurprised.

And that began our three-day road trip through seven U.S. states, two of them battlegrounds between Hillary Clinton and Donald Trump — Michigan, where polls show Clinton in the lead, and Ohio, closer to tied — and five of them redder than Trump in a rage: Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana.

At the Nashville BBQ joint where we ate our weight in smoked meat, the admonishments posted on the wall included "No swearing" and "God bless the South."

Driving through Alabama, one radio announcer boasted: "Tune in every morning for the latest news in the culture wars."

When we got to New Orleans, one neighbour had been keeping a lookout for the truck, and hurried over to help us unload. "All right, now?" he asked and smiled. "You made it."

SEEING SOMETHING TOTALLY NEW

Aside from dusty old surgical samples, until this year no scientist had ever seen the early human development that takes place between approximately seven and 14 days after fertilization. The embryo is burrowed into the mother's body, hidden from view. Now technology is letting us peer into the process, in real time, for the first time.

WHAT WE LEARNED

Using stem cells donated by fertility clinics, two groups of scientists, one in the U.K. and one in the U.S., have grown human embryos for up to 12-13 days in the lab. (Usually, the embryo latches on to the mother around day seven). Here's what surprised them most, according to scientist Gist Croft, a member of the U.S. team.

1. Failure is really built into the process: about 80 per cent of embryos are not viable.
2. Early embryos are amazingly self-organizing. It was previously thought they required input (like hormone signals) from the mother to grow and arrange into a complex shape. But they do this all on their own.
3. Researchers discovered what they think is a brand new cell type, which they dubbed yolk sac trophoderm cells. Even more crazy: Though scientists don't yet know exactly what they do, these cells seem to express genes from all three of the other main embryo cell types, meaning they could have an important role in future stem-cell science.

ZERO CREDIBILITY

Canadian Gaétan Dugas, the "Patient Zero" blamed for spreading HIV in North America, was no more responsible than hundreds of others who got AIDS in the early '80s, a study shows. But the myth persisted, possibly because people misread the letter O (for "out-of-state"), as a zero in the early study.

DEFINITION
Gastrulation is a developmental process in complex animals (like us!) that happens when the embryo (at this point a hollow blob of cells) folds in on itself and reorganizes into three layers. These germ layers each give rise to a specific group of organs.

USE IT IN A SENTENCE

Biologist Lewis Wolpert once quipped, "It is not birth, marriage, or death, but gastrulation, which is truly the most important time in your life."

INFERNO

Da Vinci Code franchise just latest member of controversy club

Richard Crouse
For Metro Canada

This weekend professor of religious iconology and symbology Robert Langdon (Tom Hanks) returns to theatres in Inferno, the third movie in the Da Vinci Code franchise.

In 2006, the fictional Harvard prof made his big screen debut, uncovering the complicated personal life of Jesus Christ in The Da Vinci Code. Three years later he used his knowledge of symbology to unravel the mystery of a secret brotherhood called the Illuminati and thwart a terrorist act against the Vatican.

In between those two movies I received dozens of outraged emails, long tracts regarding Dan Brown's books, the upcoming movie, The Illuminati and the veracity of the stories.

In response to the folks who contacted me, concerned the film, which had not been released yet, would be a dangerous piece of anti-Catholic propaganda, I wrote a forward to my Angels and Demons review, pointing letter writers toward the Vatican newspaper L'Osservatore

Romano. They described Angels and Demons as "harmless entertainment which hardly affects the genius and mystery of Christianity."

Their review noted it is filled with historical inaccuracies but went on to suggest that one could make a game of pointing out all of the film's historical mistakes.

In other words, don't take it seriously and you'll have a good time. Despite the Vatican newspaper's warm embrace, the film still ignited a firestorm of criticism from people upset about the story's alleged anti-Catholic sentiments.

Inferno sidesteps religious controversy with a tale of a deadly virus that threatens all of humanity, but cinema and religion have often made for uncomfortable pairings.

In 1999 the Catholic League denounced Dogma's tale of two fallen angels (Ben Affleck and Matt Damon) trying to get back into heaven as "blasphemy." More recently, uproar erupted over Darren Aronofsky's unorthodox take on the story of Noah. Jerry Johnson, president of the National Religious Broadcasters, loudly objected to the film's "insertion of the extremist environmental agenda."

Perhaps the most controversial religious film ever was The Devils, based on Aldous Huxley's nonfiction book The Devils of Loudun. Years before Ken Russell made the movie, a filmmaker approached Huxley wanting to turn the story of a radical 17th century French Catholic priest accused of witchcraft and burned at the stake, into a film. Huxley said, "Don't do it."

He thought there was no way the story could be presented in an entertaining way without short-circuiting people's minds. Turns out maybe he was right.

Forty-five years after its release Russell's film is little seen but much talked about. Banned, censored and still unavailable in its complete form on Blu-Ray, the movie's graphic church orgy offended many — and was cut and removed by censors — but it's more than shock and titillation.

It's a film that makes a serious statement about the struggle between church and state but does so in an entertaining and provocative way.

British actress talks career, women in film, new indie flick

Steve Gow
For Metro Canada

She may have starred in the Pirates of the Caribbean franchise and played Moneypenny in the past two James Bond blockbusters, but it's a small indie flick that's getting Naomie Harris truly excited.

"This movie is so beautiful and I love the way it's touching people," said the English actress about her latest feature Moonlight. "People are saying that they're looking at life in new ways; it's very rare that you get a movie that touches people as deeply as this."

Since premiering at the Toronto International Film Festival, the Barry Jenkins-directed drama following a youth trying to navigate adolescence in the slums of Miami has been winning critics and building

"Hollywood has an issue for writing for women in general," said Harris, adding that a profession dominated by dudes often means an understated female perspective. However, the 40-year-old Harris is also happy to report opportunities are improving with age. "Things are always getting better and I certainly feel like I have a better quality of scripts than I ever had before."

With a filmography that stretches back to the '80s, Harris is also impressively zen when it comes to reminiscing about a storied career that includes playing everything from a voodoo witch to Winnie Mandela.

"You do the very best you can and you hope people will go and see it but I always think the right movie finds the right person at the right time," stated Harris, before making one concluding addendum. "But I do believe everybody should go see Moonlight."

Hanks finds parallels in Inferno's burning issues

Embedded within the manic action of Inferno, the latest big-screen adaptation of a Dan Brown thriller, is a warning about the dangers of seeking simple solutions to complex problems. Star Tom Hanks says it's a theme with echoes in the current U.S. presidential race.

Inferno sets Hanks' polymathic professor Robert Langdon on the trail of a deadly plague concocted by billionaire scientist Bertrand Zobrist (Ben Foster) out of a sort of warped humanitarianism: He plans to end war, poverty and famine by wiping out half the world's population.

Hanks says the belief that there's a "one-step answer to all problems" is alarmingly relevant. "Down through history there's been an awful lot of people who say: Here's what the problem is, here's what it was caused by, and all you have to do is my suggestion, there's an easy way in order to make it go away," Hanks said.

"It's very simplistic, it's very reactionary. It's almost like a fundamental embracing of a brand of ignorance," he added. "But I think it's part of the political discourse."

Tom Hanks and Felicity Jones. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

itical discourse."

Hanks clearly has the contest between Trump and Clinton in mind. America, he says, needs "vision and leadership and scope, as opposed to one-stop shopping fixes all."

"I'm not a political activist, nor am I a political animal, but I will say: Look, I'm going to vote for her, because I think this is a marathon in order to solve not just the most obvious problems, but the ones that are coming down the pipe."

Political discussion over, Hanks happily reverts to talking about Dan Brown's mega-successful mix of medieval conspiracies and modern-day skulduggery.

In his third screen outing as Langdon, Hanks is sent on a high-stakes treasure hunt centred around the life and works of Dante Alighieri, whose Divine Comedy created a teeming vision of hell that has influenced artists and writers for 700 years.

He's joined by Felicity Jones' brainy medic Dr. Sienna Brooks as ally and intellectual sparring partner.

Hanks, who played Langdon in The Da Vinci Code and Angels & Demons — both directed by Ron Howard, as is Inferno — says he still finds pleasure in making the border-hopping thrillers. Inferno scurries from Florence to Venice to Istanbul, wreaking havoc in some of the world's most beautiful historic buildings.

For the viewer, the movie offers the pleasures of a good old-fashioned caper — Hanks likens it to a scavenger hunt — in which the characters must decipher a string of clues in a race against time.

Inferno opens in theatres on Friday. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

a black hearted boogeyman. Chilling stuff.

5. We Are What We Are (2013) The American remake of the acclaimed Mexican indie shocker is even better; a dark, bloody tale of a murderous cannibal clan who are falling apart.

Artfully made and truly terrifying.

6. The Fury (1978) Brian De Palma's outrageous horror thriller pits psychics against each other with explosive results.

Worth it for the crazed final shot alone and a great macho performance by Kirk Douglas.

7. Hush (2015) One of the greatest home invasion horror films ever made helmed by one of the greatest modern horror directors, Mike Flanagan, whose Ouija: Origin of Evil is currently haunting theaters.

This is a simple, smart and stylish shocker.

8. Hellbound: Hellraiser II (1988) This atmospheric and wildly gory sequel to Clive Barker's 1987 sex and death classic is arguably even better than the first instalment, with incredible make-up FX, surreal sequences and a majestic Christopher Young score.

9. The Legend of Hell House (1973) Moody and intelligent adaption of Richard Matheson's chilling novel Hell House is rightfully regarded as one of the best haunted house films of all time.

If you're looking for maximum fright, watch it all alone at home with all of the lights off.

10. The Fly (1958) The original sci-fi/horror classic is in essence a tragedy, with a scientist fighting a losing battle with his humanity after a botched experiment leaves him with the head of an insect.

An early Vincent Price horror role and a fine — often bloody — chiller that still works today.

Spooky spots reveal ghost hunting is just like fishing

Casper Cop chucks coins across the darkened Treasureland arcade at the Sylvan Beach Amusement Park and lets them ricochet on the ancient wooden floor.

"It's James. I've got a friend here who'd like to meet you. I've got recorders going. You gonna do something for us? We'd really love to meet you."

Casper Cop is private investigator James Pendell by profession and ghost hunter by passion. He has a seasonal gig leading the Park After Dark Ghost Tours.

"I've got a penny," Pendell says cajolingly to the darkness. "Will you throw it back to me? Where's my little girl?"

A prankster spirit child sometimes tosses the coins back or jingles them. She's one of the many ghosts said to roam this paranormal paradise in a vintage amusement park.

Pendell's tours start just as the park is closing and continue when he has the place to himself for several spooky hours, making for a "high freakout factor."

He has earned one of 65 spots on the Haunted History Trail of New York State, which

The Sylvan Beach Amusement Park is among the haunted haunts you can visit. SYLVAN BEACH AMUSEMENT PARK launched three years ago and keeps adding places such as creepy inns, parks, theatres, museums, restaurants and cemeteries, offering ghost stories, tours and hunts.

Ghost hunters use Maglites (a type of flashlight), cameras, dowsing rods, video recorders, audio records, electronic voice phenomena recorders and other tools to communicate with the spirit world.

You don't have to be a true believer to be captivated by the haunted trail.

Fans of shows like Ghost Hunters, Ghost Adventures, Haunted Collector and Scariest Places on Earth are drawn to it.

So are the merely "paranormal curious."

"Could you do something for us today?" Pendell pleads with his prankster spirit. "I've got a penny. Will you throw it back to me?"

Not tonight. We hunt in other dark, empty buildings, inviting the spirits to play knocking games, mess with salt and pepper shakers, and manipulate flashlights, but nobody wants to play.

"People say when I die I'm going to haunt this place, and I say I just might — the legend of Casper Cop." (Note: The park has just decided to put its ghost hunts on hold, so look for Pendell through his website.)

Ghost hunting is often likened to fishing. Sometimes the fish bite like mad and sometimes they don't, but fishing is so pleasurable it hardly matters.

I spent three days driving New York's haunted trail, visited 12 spots, met countless characters, such as Pendell, and embarked on five ghost hunts. Did I see, hear, feel or photograph a ghost? Not definitively.

At the Historic Palmyra Wm. Phelps General Store/Palmyra Museum, executive director Bonnie Hays tries to communicate with a girl named Holly who died in a fire with her mom and five siblings.

We sit in the parlour where Holly likes to hide under a table with a basket of toys, but she pretty much ignores our overtures. Eventually someone else seems to reach out via the Maglite we set out.

With these small flashlights, you rotate the heads until they illuminate, twist them back to the barely off position and put them on a flat surface. Ask yes or no questions and the spirits just might answer by flashing the lights.

At the Naples Hotel in the Finger Lakes, innkeeper Dominick Gallo also favours the Maglite approach.

"I know you're here. Could you please give us a sign? Turn on one of the flashlights. Please don't skunk me tonight." (Getting skunked is a fishing term for when you don't catch anything.)

Gallo instructs us to take pictures, especially in the corners of haunted guest rooms, and look at them later to see if we caught any orbs, figures or faces. We didn't. But the spirits do finally respond when we settle in Gallo's office.

"If you're a male spirit, can you please turn the flashlight on for me?" Gallo pleads.

Nothing.

"If you're a female spirit, please turn the flashlight on for me?"

Nothing.

"If this is the kids, can you please turn the flashlight on? Touch somebody? Give another sign you're here."

Nothing.

"Are you bothered? If we're bothering you, please turn the flashlight on."

The light flashes.

He interprets the subsequent erratic series of flashlight bursts as meaning two spirits, one strong and one weak, are taking turns communicating.

TRAVEL NOTES THE PAPAL APARTMENT, A PHOTOGRAPHY EXHIBIT AND A NEW QUR'AN DISPLAY
Vatican City vacancy

Now this is an open house: The Vatican is opening the private apartment at the Castel Gandolfo papal summer retreat to the public, giving visitors a rare look at the bed where Popes Pius XII and Paul VI died and where John Paul II recovered from the 1981 assassination attempt. Pope Francis has declined to use the unit, meaning that the 55-hectare (135-acre) estate in the Alban hills south of Rome is increasingly being opened to the public.

Vancouver exhibit

The Vancouver Art Gallery is set to open what it says is the most comprehensive exhibition of work by the influential American photographer Walker Evans ever shown in Canada. Walker Evans: Depth of Field features more than 200 photos from the 1920s to the '70s. Many of them have become iconic, made in the U.S. during the Great Depression. The show runs from Oct. 29 to Jan. 22. Gallery director Kathleen Bartels said Evans' work holds "a special significance" in Vancouver.

The Qur'an in D.C.

Two consecutive pages of this Qur'an will be on display during the show The Art of the Qur'an: Treasures from the Museum of Turkish and Islamic Arts, which opens Saturday at the Arthur M. Sackler Gallery. The sprawling pages, each measuring 5 feet by 7 feet, with rows of calligraphy standing 8 to 9 inches high, date from about 1400. Curator Massumeh Farhad says these pages reference the feared nomadic conqueror, Timur, who ruled a huge empire based in central Asia.

Canada tops Lonely Planet's must-visits

Canada has been named Lonely Planet's destination of the year for 2017. Colombia and Finland were rated second and third respectively in Lonely Planet's Best in Travel 2017 guide, hitting bookstores Tuesday.

Reasons cited to visit Canada were next year's "elongated birthday party," with the country celebrating 150 years since Confederation, and a weak Canadian dollar pushing down prices, giving visitors "plenty of pocket money to spend on Canada's exciting fusion food and mysteriously underrated wine."

Rookie nets two on man advantage in win over Stars

Rookie Patrik Laine scored twice on the power play as the Winnipeg Jets defeated the Dallas Stars 4-1 on Thursday.

The Jets have scored five power-play goals this season, with the 18-year-old Laine netting four of them.

Winnipeg rookie forward Kyle Connor scored his first NHL goal and defenceman Tyler Myers got his team on the scoreboard 15 seconds into the first period.

The Jets had a 3-0 lead heading into the third before Stars forward Tyler Seguin scored his fourth goal of the season 33 seconds into the period.

Connor Hellebuyck made 38 saves for the Jets (3-4-0), who had lost their two previous games.

Antti Niemi stopped 32 shots for Dallas (3-3-1).

The Stars had defeated the Jets 3-2 Tuesday in the first game of the home-and-home set between the clubs.

Myers took advantage of a loose puck bouncing off the boards in the Dallas end to fire a one-timer from the point past Niemi.

Nikolaj Ehlers and Connor then went down the ice on a

2-on-1 at even strength, with Ehlers passing the puck across the ice for Connor's high shot and the 2-0 lead at 16:12.

The Jets had gone into the game only holding a lead for a total 17:02 in their first six games.

Laine's fifth goal of the season at 4:30 was scored on the power play eight seconds after Stars defenceman John Klingberg went to the penalty box for hooking.

His goal marked the first time this season Winnipeg held a three-goal lead, and the first time the Jets hadn't trailed going into the third period.

Dallas avoided the shutout when Seguin fired the puck into the top right corner of the net.

Seconds after the goal, Jets defenceman Dustin Byfuglien crashed into the boards after getting tangled up with Stars forward Antoine Roussel, but only went to the dressing room for a few minutes.

Laine scored his second power-play goal of the game with six seconds left in a two-man advantage on a shot into the left side of the net that made it 4-1 at 10:17.

The Jets head to Colorado for a game Friday against the Avalanche. Dallas travels to play the Minnesota Wild on Saturday.

Redblacks hope to minimize mistakes

Too often this season the Ottawa Redblacks have been their own worst enemy.

Costly turnovers, penalties and dropped balls are just a few of the ways the Redblacks have stumbled, and yet they still manage to sit atop the East Division despite their disappointing play at times.

The Redblacks (7-8-1) make no excuses for their inconsistencies, but know time is running short to start playing smarter and better.

Some might point to the staggering number of injuries the Redblacks have suffered this season and the endless changes to the starting lineup — including for this week's crucial tilt against the Winnipeg Blue Bombers — for some of the mistakes, but the Redblacks know they need to eliminate the mental mistakes.

"We're playing great football when things are rolling our way," said quarterback Henry Burris. "Now we have to find a way to continue it going in that direction and not have those lapses throughout the course of the game because those have cost us points, they've cost us games and it has hurt us in the end."

Through the last six weeks Ottawa has struggled in the second half and been outscored 99-70 through the final 30 minutes. Last week Ottawa had a 15-point lead over Hamilton at the half and ended up losing 39-36 in overtime.

"Third quarters have really killed us, even though we're in a position to put points on the board," Burris said.

"We have to be able to deal with the momentum swings, but still maintain our focus to come out and swing it in our favour and keep the momentum going in our direction."

Father-son dream comes to fruition

WORLD SERIES

Tomlin's dad to watch his son pitch in spite of medical scare

While his dad sat on a bucket in their backyard catching, little Josh Tomlin pretended he was pitching in the World Series.

He's about to do it for real. And his dad, Jerry, recently paralyzed from the chest down following a medical scare that threatened his life, will be there in Chicago watching.

"It will mean everything," said Tomlin, who will start Game 3 at Wrigley Field. "We've talked about this, shoot, since I was three or four years old. I can remember having conversations with him — 'Bases loaded, full count, bottom of the ninth, so and so is up to bat. What are you going to throw him?'"

"Let's go fastball' and I'd throw a fastball and on strike three we'd jump up and throw our gloves and stuff like that. It was cool to be able to look back and think, man, I was doing that when I was four years old and now I'm actually going to live it and he's actually going to get to see it.

"That's pretty special to me and something I'll never forget for the rest of my life." In August, Jerry Tomlin, 57, was rushed into surgery in Whitehouse, Texas, after he was diagnosed with arteriovenous malformation, a condition that affects blood circulation near the spine. The procedure saved Jerry's life, but it has left him in a wheelchair with a long, difficult road to recovery ahead. It's not known if he'll walk again. After spending nearly two months in a rehab facility in Dallas, he was released last week — on Josh's 32nd birthday. Jerry watched from his living room as the Indians clinched their first AL pennant since 2007. The Tomlins are very close, their bond strengthened by their love of baseball.

"I talk to him every day, him and my mom both," Tomlin said. "They've been a huge part of my life and a huge part of my success in the big leagues." Tomlin stepped up after the Indians lost starters Danny Salazar and Carlos Carrasco to injuries in September. His team needed him and Tomlin came through, delivering the way his dad taught him. "If you did things the right way and always gave 100 per cent, he was in your corner," Tomlin said. Jerry Tomlin will be there again when his son pitches on baseball's biggest stage, the one they played on before. "I'm just looking forward to seeing him," Tomlin said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CANADIAN OLYMPIC COMMITTEE

$37M more invested into Own the Podium

The Canadian Olympic Committee said Thursday it is renewing its commitment to high-performance sport by investing $37 million in funding over the next four years through the Own the Podium program.

The funding amount is consistent with the amount the COC invested in the previous quadrennial.

Canada won 22 medals last summer at the Rio Olympics: four gold, three silver and 15 bronze.

"We've made some investments along the way and as we heard today and as we've seen first-hand in Rio, those investments are working," COC chief executive officer Chris Overholt said. "But the competitive landscape just continues to go up so we've got to keep our focus on maximizing our investment in sport."

The COC also announced it will commit $16 million in new funding for the growth and development of the next generation of Olympians, an amount that will be matched by the federal government.

As part of the new model, the COC will invest $5 million into a new coaching enhancement program and another $5 million to strengthen the capacity and resources of the country's national sport federations.

"This coaching enhancement program actually provides us with an avenue to keep coaches in Canada, build them, recruit new ones into Canada and then keep them in the system," said Coaching Association of Canada CEO Lorraine Lafreniere.

Also included in the new funding plans are $1 million for Game Plan, a program designed to ease the athletes' transition into the workforce after they retire from competition, and $2 million for the Canadian Olympic and Paralympic Sport Institute Network.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
This is an accident-prone day for your kids, so be vigilant. This also is a very dicey day for romantic relationships. Be patient with everyone.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Domestic strife might occur today, because chaos on the home front puts your nerves on edge. Small appliances might break down, and minor breakages could occur. Have patience.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
This is an accident-prone day, so be careful. Think carefully before you speak or do anything. Things will not unfold the way you expect them to.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
You feel impulsive and impatient today. Don't let your lack of patience get you in trouble. Easy does it.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
You are unsettled today. You feel as if you're waiting for the other shoe to drop. That's because today is a bit of a crapshoot, and everyone feels it.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
A friend might surprise you by doing something you least expect. Don't overreact. Likewise, a group to which you belong might oppose what you say. Go gently. If you act without thinking, you could lose friends and your reputation.
